

I want to keep the ban on the use of cell phones on airborne aircraft. As a frequent flier, it is extremely annoying to listen to other people's conversations - those that place before the cabin door closes. People do not listen to the flight attendant when they are asked to be courteous to begin with. I don't think they would respect others during their cell phone conversations. It's loud enough on an airplane and I don't want to listen to someone's life story or business deal while I'm on a plane. Also, the likelihood of someone paying attention to emergency procedures while they are on the phone will most likely diminish drastically.
